Choosing the Best Fabric for Embroidery on Kids' Onesies, T-Shirts, and Adult Tops

Selecting the right fabric is key to ensuring your designs come out beautifully, withstand everyday wear and tear, and remain comfortable without being too heavy or bulky for the baby, child, or discerning customer.

What Type of Fabric is Best for Embroidery?

100% Cotton

- Why Choose It? Cotton is top choice for its smooth texture and heavier weight and stitches well.
- Best For: Intricate embroidery with heavier threads. It is great for creating vibrant, defined patterns that are meant to stand out.
- Negative: Embroidered design can be too bulky on the apparel for kids from Newborn to 2T and adults requiring light weight tops

65% Polyester / 35% Cotton Blend

- Why Choose It? This blend combines the best of both worlds—durability, light weight, and ease of care. It is less prone to shrinking and wrinkling, which makes it ideal for kids' clothes that require frequent washing.
- Best For: Simpler embroidery designs. It is commonly used for everyday wear like baby clothes, where comfort is essential.
- Best For: Embroidered designs when less bulky/fewer stitches are perfect on the apparel for discerning customers. Customers like a baby through 2T will prefer embroidery designs that are lighter and less obtrusive.

Pro Tip: The slight stretch in polyester blends can help reduce the chances of puckering, especially in machine embroidery.

When it comes to embroidering kids' or adult clothing, the fabric you choose is just as important as the design. For comfort and a lightweight feel, a 65% Polyester / 35% Cotton blend can be the perfect choice over 100% cotton.
